

Keith Richards might have written "Paint It, Black," but we say paint it red. Photographer Bent Rej accompanied The Rolling Stones on their first European "Satisfaction Tour;" this 1970 print from the Copenhagen stop is sure to give you satisfaction. Available at 1stdibs.com.

Diane Rosenblum puts your eyes to the test with this abstract piece printed on canvas titled "Yayoi Kusama" that's reminiscent of a colorblind test. With this hanging in your home, you'll pass with flying colors. Available at aerenagalleries.com.

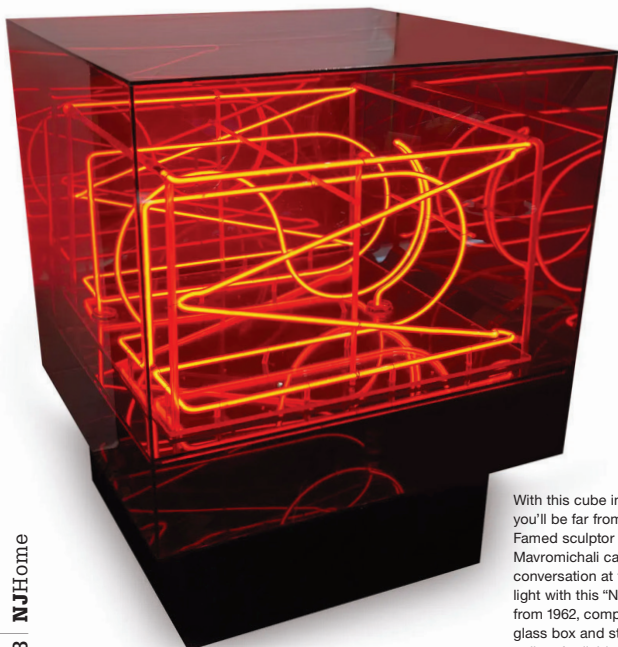

Bring home a special type of bouquet with Charles Lutz's ode to Andy Warhol with his silkscreen painting titled "Denied Warhol Flowers." Lutz swaps pink and green for a bold scarlet hue and a black backdrop. Available at 1stdibs.com.

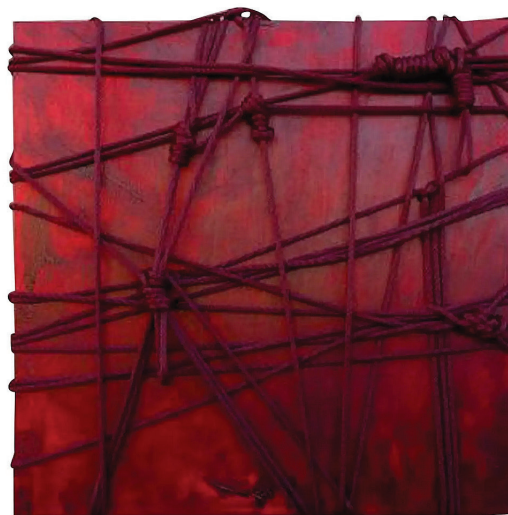

Add mystery and color to any room with "Bernadette in Red Hat with Book" circa 2003 from late photographer Rodney Smith. You'll feel like you stepped right onto a vintage fashion shoot. Available at artsynet.

Tie the room together with a ribbon—a ribbon sculpture that is. This whimsical Mark Birnstead piece from 2020 appears to fall and unfold like a ribbon. The kicker? It's actually made of industrial steel. Available at artsynet.

With this cube in your home, you'll be far from a square. Famed sculptor Chryssa Vardea-Mavromichali calls you to start conversation at the speed of light with this "Neon Sculpture" from 1962, complete with a plexi-glass box and stand for optimal ogling. Available at 1stdibs.com.

Ever wonder what the fall is like in Japan? The "Momijigari" modern sculptural relief painting by Chanel Verdult encompasses the rich crimson reds reminiscent of the changing colors of the country from fall into winter. "Momijigari" is the eastern tradition of "fall hunting," where the country is dyed entirely by red and orange maple leaves. Available at 1stdibs.com
